I was just adding a thin strand of sweetgrass when the old dog came leaping into the clearing. It stopped and shook, sending water flying into the air. The wet drops landed on my small fire, extinguishing it.

“Look what you’ve done!” I shouted. “You mangy dog!”

It was then that I recognised what I’d seen. The dog was dripping wet! “Where did you find water, Worthless One? Show me!” I commanded.

The dog barked once, then flopped down onto the grass. I decided to wait until it left again and then follow.
